Excerpt: . thou believe that I have dug the grave of thy daughter, of her who ought to be my wife? What sayst thou? replied the old man.-- I loved Atala, cried I, the daughter of that woman of Florida whom thou once lovedst. My voice was completely stifled by my tears. I was overwhelmed by a thousand recollections--the love of country, liberty, my lost native wilds! Lopez, who could scarcely comprehend me, begged that I would explain myself. I gave him a concise account of my adventures. He was affected by it: he admired and wept for that daughter whom he had never known. He launched out into long regrets on the subject of that happiness which we might have enjoyed together in a hut in the recesses of some wilderness. But, my son, added he, God decreed otherwise, and it is our duty to...
