Under the auspices of the state superintendent of public instruction, he has delivered more than 150 different lectures on geography and natural history to the teachers of the public schools. His lectures, which are delivered at the museum to 25,000 educators, are now repeal ed by the board of education In the city to over 70,000 citizens, and under the direction of the state superintendent to nearly 800,000 pupils of the public schools in seventy cities and villages of the commonwealth. This system of illustrated instruction is now rapidly spreading throughout our country. HALL, Wilburn Briggs, naval officer, was born on his father s plantation, in Fairfield district, S. C., Sept. 20, 1838, son of James Gregg Hall and Jemima Jones, daughter of Dr. Thomas Briggs, also a South Carolina planter, and a descendant, through the maternal line, of the Lewis family of Virginia. He was educated in a South Carolina academy, at the Georgia Military Institute at Marietta, and a classical and collegiate institution in Northern Louisiana. In 1855 he was appointed an acting midshipman in the United States Naval Academy, where, on his graduation at the head of his class in 1859, he was publicly presented with a sword inscribed as a memorial of highest academic merit. He was then...
