He was a pianist, a teacher and a composer. He developed several musical ways such as programmatic music, technique and thematic transformation. He traveled most of his life, and composed a number of works about the places that he traveled. He met his first lover, Countess Marie dAgoult at the end of 1832, and they had three children, Blandine, Cosima and Daniel. Liszt separated from Countess Marie dAgoult in 1844, and he had met his second beloved one who took a very important role for Liszts life, Princess Carolyne in 1847. His only son died at age of twenty-one in 1859, and three years later, his elder daughter Blandine died at the age of twenty-six after giving birth to her first child. Liszts only surviving daughter, Cosima left her husband, Hans von Blow in order to live with Richard Wagner. These three children are from Countess Marie dAgoult. Lastly, Princess Carolyne had been trying to obtain a divorce from Prince Nicholas von Sayn-Wittgenstein in order to marry Liszt, but it was denied on the day before their planned wedding day on Liszts fiftieth birthday, October 22, 1861. He spent most of the time composing religious music, and by this time he began to write some pieces for organ. He stayed at Rome for a long time and spent his elder life. He started a two-year retreat at the Madonna del Rosario, and he completed Two Franciscan Legends, St. Franois dAssise: La Predication aux Oiseaux, and St. Franois...
