RareBooksClub. Paperback. Book Condition: New. This item is printed on demand. Paperback. 70 pages. OCLC Number: (OCoLC)289172523 Subject: Deployment (Strategy) -- Government policy -- United States. Excerpt: . . . UN guidelines call for DPKO to undertake planning and predeployment tasks before the approval of a UN Security Council mandate authorizing an operation. These include drawing up operations plans to address the expected mandate, estimated sector responsibilities, and force requirements. DPKO also assesses the availability of forces from potential contributors and then validates the estimates through visits of UN military and police officials to the host country and to troop and police contributing countries to assess unit readiness and availability. The Secretary General then issues a report on establishing the mission, including its size and resources. On the basis of the report, the Security Council may then pass a resolution authorizing the operations mandate and number of troops and police. According to U. S. officials, this is the maximum level allowed. Although the Security Council may authorize the missions mandate, its full budget must still be prepared and approved. In this process, the UN Department of Field Support prepares a draft budget and the UN Advisory Committee on Administrative and...
